Olga Muñoz loves everything about her work

“I totally love my profession and I love what I do!” said Olga J. Muñoz, managing partner at Soltero, Muñoz & Associates (SM&A). Working alongside her husband and fellow architect Ramón Soltero, Muñoz said that once she starts a project, she works very hard and isn’t happy until it is done to her total satisfaction. “I have always been a very committed person and a perfectionist,” she added. “As an architect and the managing partner I get to wear many hats, from working with the total building design to dealing with the economics of contracts, taxes, human resources, etc.”

Although she said she enjoys the design aspect of her work the most, she also pointed out that the logistic, real estate and feasibility analyses of a project excite her too. “When a client comes with a property and needs advice on the best use for his land, I get a lot of satisfaction in having the knowledge and vision of what it could be, the pros and cons, and how long it will take to develop,” she said and added that the client relation part is also enjoyable. “Not only is each client different in personality, but even if I am offering similar architectural and engineering services to various clients, I end up adjusting each service to meet a client’s specific expectations and situation.” Dedicated to architecture and engineering since 1988, SM&A offers integrated services that include critical project development assessments, A/E design and construction administration. The Miramar firm is comprised of more than 20 professionals including architects, civil engineers, structural engineers, design technicians and inspectors.

While Muñoz is very passionate about her work, she is equally passionate about her children. “My children are definitely my main source of motivation and drive,” she said. “My aspiration is to see them become responsible, happy and satisfied adults.” ■
